PREFACE.

THE present work is my private repertory. It was originally not intended for the press, had not my friends insisted upon its publication. I have revised, remodelled, added to, and expunged from it, in order to make it practical, to the best of my ability. The synthetic arrangement of works of this kind had to be in part omitted, in order to insure brevity and avoid repetitions. Hence the remedies and their symptoms have been left out, and the symptoms and their remedies have received sole attention. I have gathered from all attainable sources, and introduced the verifications from my own experience during the period of twenty-five years and more. I have gleaned from Hahnemann's Materia Medica Pura and his Chronic Diseases; Allen's Materia Medica, including the first eight volumes; Hering and Lippe's Materia Medica; Guernsey's Obstetrics; Raue's Pathology and Therapeutics; Bæhr's and Kafka's Therapeutics; Hale's New Remedies, etc.; in fact, the whole homœopathic literature of this country and Europe has been diligently searched in order to secure, if possible, the utmost perfection with regard to everything that is reliable and worthy of trust. For omissions and shortcomings, which, in the face of the utmost care, may be detected here and there, I crave the indulgence of the profession.

W. EGGERT.

INTRODUCTION.

THE apparent want of success in the treatment of female disorders, in comparison with other diseases, may be only accounted for, first, by the insufficiency of our provings upon the female; and, second, by the difficulty of getting at those symptoms which have been obtained, either from the proving or from clinical experience, in an easy and practical way. And yet our Materia Medica is not quite as barren as some try to make us believe, nor have our clinics to hide their results on account of inferior successes than those obtained from any other mode in the practice of medicine. To be frank, it often seemed to us as if the complaint of the insufficiency of our provings is frequently only called for to atone in reality the ignorance of our practitioners in the knowledge of homœopathic Materia Medica. And it is to a great extent this ignorance and its apparent justification that has led many of our practitioners astray, and induced them to seek in other modes and manners of treatment the satisfaction which the apparent adherence to the homœopathic principle refused them to yield. We hear and read it so frequently that such and such remedy, seemingly indicated, has failed to cure, and that homœopathy has often been a failure after faithful trial. We confess to look with skepticism upon all such assertions, because we used to talk in a similar manner until we became gradually but fully convinced that our failures were almost always the result of our ignorance of the Materia Medica, and the want of understanding to apply our law of cure properly. Strict adherence to the teachings of Hahnemann would make us more successful and liberal at the same time; liberal, because we would feel convinced that homœopathic knowledge and art have been truly exhausted before we would resort to any other mode of treatment. But in order to arrive at such conviction, we must first of all become experts of homœopathic Materia Medica. Why cannot we master Materia Medica just as well as anatomy, physiology, surgery, etc.? There is no excuse whatsoever for our ignorance. But instead of training experts, we see occasionally mongrelism encouraged and defended by a sham and would-be liberality. A flag with the inscription "Freedom of Thought and Liberty of Action" has been unfurled, and now almost every fool can find protection in its folds.

The lamentable outcry, "I have tried homœopathy, but it failed," will find most instances thus exemplified. Dr. A. has a case of gonorrhœa to attend. He does perhaps not even understand how to examine such a case in its minutiae in order to prescribe properly, but he has heard and read that Cannabis sativa is a good remedy for such a disorder; he gives it to his patient, but it failed to cure. Perhaps he tried another remedy with only the same result, and now he complains that homœopathy cannot cure gonorrhœa, although hundreds of practitioners testify to the contrary. He now orders injections, etc. Should a stricture of the urethra be the result of it, that flag of "Liberty of Action" will protect him, for he had tried homœopathy (?), but, alas, how? Thus "liberty of action" (with "freedom of thought" we have nothing to do; let every one think as he pleases, that hurts nobody) will embrace and pet all practitioners if they only try homœopathy to the best of their ability, no matter if in their ignorance they produce diseases of the heart, or secondary and tertiary syphilis, when treating rheumatism and syphilis with external applications, or by producing quinine cachexia when abusing quinine in fevers, or by producing various forms of diseases by suppressing skin diseases, etc. If those who introduced this liberal innovation deny any intention of such kind, they should have given to the profession a better definition of their ideas, for without such a definition the sweeping phrase "liberty of action" becomes almost identical with "licentiousness." Hahnemann and his disciples never denied the use of mechanical means necessary for traumatic causes, nor the antidotes required in cases of poisoning, nor hygienic measures of any kind.

If the masters of our school would complain of the insufficiency of our remedies we might listen to them; but when the ignoramus hurts our ears with such lamentation, we have only scorn to offer. And who has perhaps more to suffer from indolent and ignorant practitioners than our poor women? and how often has an innocent uterus been made the battlefield of medical stupidity? Far be it from us to decry and denounce the modern innovations in therapeutics; but we can conscientiously only then allow ourselves to go outside of the "restricted views" of homœopathic teachings, when these views or principles have been strictly complied with and have been found wanting. That there are powers in nature and art assigned to cure diseases besides those taught by Hahnemann, none of us will deny, but no one will also assert that those powers are better understood now than those which Hahnemann disclosed to us. He wanted all restrictions removed from those who are "endowed with the necessary power and knowledge to preserve human life, and with that delicate consciousness which every one whom God has appointed a guardian of human life should possess." Thus spoke Hahnemann, a master and genius in medicine, a man of the highest culture and learning; and when he penned these lines he thought he addressed his equals in learning and experience, like Hufeland and others. But he certainly did not entertain the idea to allow the ignorant to experiment upon the sick. He never would have granted "liberty of action" to the majority of our practitioners. Such independence he would have willingly accorded to masters like Hering, Dunham, etc., but as to the majority of our doctors it would be like putting razors in the hands of young children. What would an experienced surgeon say of a practitioner of surgery, who in spite of his title could not attend properly to a common fracture, if he would see him going outside of the accepted rules to accomplish the reunion of bones, and thereby risk the patient's health and life? Would he accord him "liberty of action?" Just so with homœopathic practitioners. First, let us become homœopaths in the truest sense of the word, and if we fail, then it will be time enough to go outside of our "restricted views." And we feel justified to say, the more we endeavor to become the former the less we will need the latter.

The whole soul of the homœopathic healing art centres in the thorough understanding of its Materia Medica and in the art to examine a patient properly; this latter must naturally include a knowledge of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, microscopy, etc. If thus equipped the practitioner finds himself at a loss, then to him and him only we grant "liberty of action." It is all in vain to say that those who entertain our views ignore progress; on the contrary, we hail it with the same pleasure and earnestness that any candid seeker after truth would do, to benefit the human race and alleviate its sufferings. But at the same time we try to guard and protest against anything that could be abused by ignorant persons, to drag medicine into licentiousness under the mantle and name of homœopathy.

The aim of this work is to make female symptomatology more easy of access, and impart if possible to our practitioners more and more confidence in the power of our remedies to control female disorders. The symptoms have been carefully selected and arranged. Although we gave to our book only the title Therapeutics of Uterine and Vaginal Discharges, we have nevertheless endeavored to give the whole symptomatology of the female generative organs, as the reader will see by a comparison of these organs through the different parts of this work. But as there exists likely no female disorder without an abnormal discharge from the uterus or the vagina, or both, we considered the present arrangement more practical and convenient. Every part contains first the quantity, quality, and time of the discharge it has reference to, and is followed by a selection of concomitants, usually existing during a proving, or frequently observed at the bedside. Part VIII contains a selection of characteristic symptoms, the most of which the preceding parts do not embrace; this was added in order to facilitate the treatment of more complicated and inveterate chronic cases. Of course we only gave the characteristics of such remedies as have a more or less special affinity to the female organism.

With regard to the dose we have but little to say. If we give preference to high attenuations, we do so from convictions forced upon us after an experience of many years; but we are not a partisan of any potency. We employ the smallest dose that will cure, and the single remedy. This we consider both liberal and rational, bearing in mind that the true and essential point in curing the sick is the selection of the right remedy, or the remedy strictly homœopathic. We discard the theory of giving high or low attenuations, according to a doubtful formula of primary and secondary symptoms, since experience has taught us that we cured both kinds of symptoms with high attenuations, and with high attenuations only. Nor do we consider it an argument in favor of low attenuations, if a cure is reported by a remedy in said attenuations, after it had failed to accomplish anything in its higher form. Such cases have come under our notice, but instead of giving the remedy low, we found the similimum in quite a different remedy, and accomplished a cure.

What has given us a great deal of thought and trouble is the question of repetition in chronic cases. While it is true that many disorders of this kind yield to a single dose, and bring about a cure, or at least a change for the better, it is equally true that many cases demand a repetition; and here the question arises, how often shall such repetition be made? To lay down a rule would be quite impossible, and only experience can be our teacher. We believe that as soon as a remedy produces a favorable change it must be suspended. If the patient gets worse, we must be careful to distinguish a medicinal aggravation from other causes, for the former will occasionally occur in spite of all opposition. A medicinal aggravation we consider a favorable sign, and suspend the remedy; only in very exceptional cases it might become necessary to give a remedy to antidote the action of the former. We know from experience that the truly homœopathic remedy will make its presence soon known in the diseased, and in highly nervous, sensitive, lean persons, usually sooner than in the robust, sluggish, and bilious. Hence we scarcely ever give to the former more than one, and to the latter usually from three to six doses, in the interval from twelve to forty-eight hours. Then time must be given to the remedy to develop its power. We usually allow a month to pass, giving the remedy right after the cessation of the menstrual flow. Following these directions, together with necessary hygienic measures, we will seldom meet with disappointment in all cases amenable to medicinal treatment.
